Religious Imposters.

To the editor of the Alexandria Gazette: An impression that was forced upon me by observing the character of ment of numerous and widely separated nationalties during extensive travels, comes to my mind with additional force whenever I look back on some of the incidents that courred in my native country in the days of my youth. And with a sincere desire not to offend the conscientious religious opinions of any of my fellow beings, I can truly state my conviction that mankind is more willing to be governed, managed, even persecuted and enslaved by absurd vagaries, more particularly when those vagaries are tinted with a slight religious shade, than to be left entirely free, or only be required to act toward their neighbors to act towards them under like circumstances. The almost universal tendency of mankind to create gods, then pretend to worship them, and when they secure any considerable following to force all about them to simulate the same fraud, can only be accounted for by the equally universal desire of man to govern his tellow men. And I feel authorized to express the opinion that the contest between usurpers cf other men's honest earnings, and the toilers their neighbors exactly as they would wish themselves, is not yet terminated. During the first halt of the present century, Ontario county, in Western New York, was regarded as one of the most highly intilligent counties in the State, and some of the leading politicians and most eminent lawyers of the State resided at Canandaigua, the county town of Ontario county. Yet, with all the advan-tages of very considerable wealth as well as in fine productive and well improved farms as in bonds and money, the general intelligence of the people and the high ability of the profes sional men and politicians, the county became quite as noted for vagarious characters as for any other feature. The first of these characters that I remember was the high pricatess of a kind of communistic society, called the society of New Jerusalem, located in a very picturesque section in the southern part of the county, not far from Crooked Lake, established and suled by a woman called Jemima Wilkison, who was said to be a pative of the State of Rhode Island. My recollection of Jemima and her queer look ing followers rans back to 1816 or 1817, when, I believe, her dupes numbered about one hundred, many of whom had placed their lands, goods and chattles in her hands, and, with wife and children, gave themselves up to Jemima and became here in body and mind. Although Jemima was not an educated woman. she possessed a wonderful knowledge of human nature and was full of resource. Her purs by coming rather uncomfortably light at one tim . she advertised that on a certain day those peo ple who had faith in the Lord might be permitted, for a small sum of money, to see her walk on the clear blue water of Seneca Lake. At the appointed time and place many hundreds of people assembled, Jemima being, with a strong following of her own, first on the ground. So, after she had collected a considerable sum and dispatched it home, she ioquired of the crowd if they had come with fall faith in the Lird that she could walk on the water. They replied, "No." She then sail, "Ab, my wicked, doubting friends, you have disappointed yourselves as well as me, for with out perfect faith of you all I should sink and be lost. Some calling out that they had faith, she told them she knew some had faith, and it was nowise to give them additional proofs of her powers to benefit them, so long as by doing so it would only be misuaderstood by the unre-When men, having families, joined her, their family relations coased, the wire and children being assigned a separate establishment from the men. By far the best, and most convenient of all the buildings of Jemima's organization was the private residence of Jemima, who lived quite alone expept a little girl who was then. 1816, about six years old who always slept in a crib by the side of Jemima's bed, and whom she made her followers believe, had been given to her by an angel. A lawyer of a neighboring villiage did her law business and coasionally remained with her two days and was the only man ever known to pass a night in her houss. Jemima would then tell her little girl that if she swoke in the night and saw a person in their room not to be frightened for she expected an angel would come to see them before moraing, but she must not speak to him. The angel osme, and, of course, expectation had kept the enjoyment of a good meal or nap. For sale little girl awake and watchful. The next morn ing at breakfast the little girl was ucusually taciture, so much so that Jemima asked her if anything was troubling her beloved. The child replied that ever since last night when I saw the angel I have been thinking that if I did no: know that he was an angel, because you told me that the angel was coming, I wou'd have thought for all the world it was Mr. Benedict Ribison. Bened ci Robison was the lawyer. The child grew up and, when Jemima died she inherited all the estate and the control of
